MOUNTAINEERING - GRAN PARADISO

Duration: 3 Fitness: ▲ ▲ ▲ ▲ Technique: ▲ ▲ ▲ A Price from: 750 €

The ascent of the Gran Paradiso is particularly renowned as it offers a route rich in contrasts, set in a majestic alpine landscape. Starting from Valsavarenche in the Aosta Valley, the larch forests that cover the heights of the valley gradually give way to vast rocky and glacial expanses, leading to the foot of the summit. The last 50 meters, with a few exposed sections, add an extra technical challenge. At the summit, the silhouette of the Madonna symbolizes the special place the Gran Paradiso holds in the hearts of Italians, being the only 4,000-meter peak located entirely within Italy. The proposed itinerary, based on a three-day program, allows plenty of time for contemplation and optimally distributes the physical effort.

Year after year, the local glaciers have shrunk, leaving behind large areas of scree. Except at the very beginning of the season, the ascent of the Gran Paradiso is no longer the mostly snowy climb it once was. The route has gradually been altered by local guides and now traverses rocky terrain, requiring sure footing to reach the glacier. Late in the season, it may even be necessary to use a short via ferrata section.

ITINERARY

Day 1

Ascent to the Chabod refuge

Transfer to the Valsavarenche from Chamonix via the Mont Blanc tunnel. Departure from the hamlet of Pravieux (1,834m) near the village of Pont. The ascent begins with a superb mule track bordered by drystone walls in the heart of a larch forest, which eventually leads us to the Lavassey pasture (2194m). From there, the vegetation gradually disappears to give way to the alpine meadows in the heart of which is the Chabod hut (2,710 m). Night in the refuge.

Elevation gain: 876m

Day 2

Ascent of Gran Paradiso

The day begins early, using the light from our headlamps we ascend gently along the imposing northwest face of Gran Paradiso to the Laveciau Glacier. At 3600m, we reach the Glacier du Grand Paradis and continue on the classic route. The last 50 vertiginous rocky metres, lead us to the summit (4,065m) from where we enjoy an exceptional view of the Alps. Descent to the Victor Emmanuel refuge (2,732 m) by the classic route where lunch awaits us. Night at the refuge.

Vertical gain: 1355m - Vertical drop: 1353m

Modification of the program in the event of bad weather conditions: If the weather on Day 2 is not compatible with the ascent of the Gran Paradiso, the modified program consists of reaching the Victor Emmanuel refuge by the panoramic path and attempting the ascent on Day 3. In this case, return to Chamonix in the middle of the afternoon.

Day 3

Day 3: Descent to Pravieux

We make our way back by a magnificent panoramic path, which offers many viewpoints of the Valsavarenche peaks. It brings us back below the Chabod refuge, from where we finish the descent by the same path we took the day before. Return to Chamonix by mid-day.

Vertical gain: 200m - Vertical drop: 1000m
