ITINERARY

Day 1

Transfer from Chamonix to Italy's Gressoney valley via the Mont Blanc tunnel. We take the Gressoney-Alagna resort ski lifts from the village of Stafal for a short ski tour as warm up. Then, we go to the comfortable Orestes hut (2 625m), located within the resort's ski fields.

Vertical ascent: 500m / Vertical descent: 500m

Day 2

After a first descent to Gabiet, we take the ski lifts to Indren (3 275m), from where we head to the Montova hut (3 500m). Once again we can lighten our packs here before heading for our first 4000er: the Vincent Pyramid (4 215m). The gentle gradient of the slopes here is made for skiing. We descend via the same route to the hut, where we spend the night.

Day 3

Destination CoI de Lys (4 256m), followed by the Signalkuppe also known as the Punta Gnifetti (4 554m). Once again, the gentle slopes here provide optimal skiing conditions. There is a markedly glaciated feel to the terrain all along the ascent and there are some spectacular views. On the summit of the Signalkuppe we discover the remarkable Margherita hut, the highest guardianed hut in the Alps. We descend via the Grenz glacier, which takes us to the Monte Rosa hut (2 883m), where we spend the night.

Day 4

We leave along the Monte Rosa glacier in the direction of the Dufourspitze (4 634m). We take a break on the shoulder (4 150m), which has magnificent views over the previous day's descent route and the impressive north face of Liskamm. Now begins the long descent to Zermatt passing the lower slopes of the Breithorn (4 164m). This is without doubt one of the most spectacular descents in the Alps. Depending on the conditions, the exit from the Gorner glacier may require a short walk. We arrive in Zermatt in the early afternoon and transfer back to Chamonix, in option. Vertical ascent: 1 270m / Vertical descent: 2 530m
