ITINERARY

Day 1

Plaine Joux - Col d'Anterne - Refuge Alfred Wills

We begin our hike at Plaine Joux (1,360 m), located in the commune of Passy. As a warm-up, we discover the famous Lac Vert (1,286 m) with its emerald-colored water. During our ascent towards the Ayères chalets (1,640 m), we leave the forest behind and reach the pastures, where the view of the Mont Blanc massif unfolds before us. We continue beneath the spectacular high cliffs of the Fiz range, including the peaks of Ayères (2,644 m) and Anterne (2,733 m). We skirt the Fiz to the southeast, crossing the Col d'Anterne (2,257 m). The atmosphere is magnificent: Mont Blanc as a backdrop, towering limestone walls above us, and vast wild spaces that we traverse to reach the splendid Lac d'Anterne (2,061 m). The Alfred Wills refuge (1,812 m) lies in a magnificent and serene setting, in the heart of green alpine pastures which contrast with the imposing verticality of the Fiz cliffs in the background.

This day will also be an opportunity to discover the geology of the mountains. We will hike between crystalline and sedimentary massifs. Geology plays a crucial role in accessing water and influencing the vegetation present. This allows us to explore topics such as edible plants and the natural resources available while hiking.

We will also use a map for the first time on an easy, well-traveled route to become familiar with map reading.

Positive elevation gain : 3280 feet - Negative elevation gain : 1970 feet - Distance : 8.7 miles

Day 2

Refuge Alfred Wills - Refuge de Sales

Crossing the Collet d'Anterne (1,790 m), we skirt the Fiz massif to the northeast and descend towards the Pleureuse and Sauffaz waterfalls (1,429 m). We then ascend the splendid Sales valley. Crossing the Pas de Sales, we discover the waterfall of the same name (1,839 m). Around midday, we reach the Sales alpine chalets and their refuge (1,870 m).

With light packs, we'll begin with compass orientation exercises. You'll learn how to take bearings. We'll also learn to read contour lines to understand terrain features and the concept of micro-relief.

Positive elevation gain : 1640 feet - Negative elevation gain : 1315 feet - Distance : 4.5 miles (minimum)

Day 3

Refuge de Sales - Col de la Portette - Plaine Joux

Today, we'll put everything we've learned so far into practice. You'll be guided from point A to point B, as defined by your mountain guide, using a map.

This will be an opportunity to navigate between paths and boulders, finding your way through map reading and our mountaineering skills, which are honed with each passing day.

We'll also have the chance to discuss the mountains and their uses during this day of sharing, as we'll encounter farmers in the high pastures.

At the end of this day, you will be able to independently hike on GR trails with staffed mountain huts.

If you wish to go further and learn how to be self-sufficient while bivouacking, you will need to take the level 2 course.

Positive elevation gain : 2135 feet - Negative elevation gain : 3775 feet - Distance : 6.8 miles
